There is no subject so complicated, and the effects of which are so uncertain, as that of a Turiff of dottes. The effects of an increase or diminution of duty on any artigle, have not ence in ten times been suicipated. So far from it, in since cases out of ian, just the apposite effect from that predicted has asseed. Take one striking example: The Turiff was increased apon Coffee, the price fell—the Turiff was reduced, and that which before sold for ten cents could not be bought for less than 12, or in that proportion. Many similar instances might be address—all going to show the incertain effects of a duty—and exploding that axiom of the political commission, that the consumer pays the duty. By the way,

A FOX STORY.

A FOX STORY.

Where is the quan, at all fond of sports, who does not like a fox chase? At any rate, there is one gentleman in Baltimore who is decidedly fond of the annusement, though he has not always met with the success his energy merits. He has often been out, but has seldom barged a fox.—When he has a hunt on the carpet he we unlly avails himself of the kindness of a friend who has several hounds, and frequently, upon his return, he has been froit ted about his want of success.

A few days ago this gentleman started on his favorite amusement, horrowing the hounds of his friend, and he was successful in his hunt. He caught a fox, after digning in his den a considerable time.—Much elasted, he started for home, but on his way stopped at a public house, where he found a number of acquaintances. To these he related his adventure, and appeared to play much at the idea of showing the fruit of his exertions when he returned the hounds. He had caught a fox, and he was determined to make the most of its just at this moment the idea of playing off a job upon him entered the heads of his acquaintances, and, after considerable troubles, they get the heig, removed the fix, and analysis of the charge, of the carried, research to the first of his freend. Here, with the usual solutation, he broke out with "He list five he, after recovering from his mentation. "I day a good while for that thing—I must have taken the cut and left the fact behind." The company around enjoyed the offsit much, but their morriment was beightened when, shortly after, they immed the true state of the case.—Sun.
